So, the 2020 Olympic Games are really going to take place in 2021, I wonder what memories the participants and spectators will take away from them. I still have many memories of the 1948 London Games as my father, mother, brother and I had the same four seats in Wembley Stadium from the first race on Monday morning to the end of the Marathon on Friday evening so, by the time we had seen people through heats, semi finals, quarterfinals and finals we felt as if we knew them.

In 2012 I got to two athletic days but my main memories are of the cheerful competence of the "volunteers" who, by some well rehearsed drill filtered us into the trains to take us to the Olympic Park with every carriage filled but nobody harassed and two sunny days in the company of crowds of good humoured, happy, excited people.

I did however manage to cajole my son to take me to stand on some London street to see the men's Marathon go by. First came the group of elite runners their minds, no doubt, full of times and distances and tactics and who and where would someone make a break, then came other groups with spaces between them, the groups growing smaller, the spaces growing longer, then just two men together. My son thought that was the end but I said the pick up car had not come so there must be someone else and at last he came, one sole runner, a tall, slender African.
We all clapped and cheered and a northern voice shouted "keep going lad, you'll catch them up round the next corner"
Then came the car and it was all over.

When he was asked why he didn't give up and ride in the car he said "My King sent me to London to honour my country by running the marathon not to give up half way"

He and Saint Paul should get on well together.

A Reflection on Mark 6 30-34 &53-56

Nestling in the shadow of a tall foxglove, another small but pretty wildflower has established itself in our garden. Like its taller neighbour, whose leaves produce a drug used to treat heart failure, Herb Robert is said to possess medicinal properties.

Previous generations used it as an antiseptic and to staunch bleeding.

It’s said by some that the plant takes its curious name from an 11th century monk remembered for his healing skills. St Bartholomew’s hospital in London still stands on the site of its founding monastery where care for the poor began in 1123.

Whilst we take free healthcare very much for granted, for many across the globe access to treatment is very limited. Imagine the despair felt by those suffering from injury or disease.

No wonder then that, time and time again, the pages of Mark’s gospel are filled with desperate crowds.

Christ feels pity for them and helps alleviate their suffering.

His example has inspired the study and practice of medicine, and also leads us to a deeper appreciation of those who work in the pharmaceutical industry, developing and making available effective medicines and vaccines.
The need is great. In the UK alone, three million items of medication are prescribed every day! BUT ever important, whatever the prescription, is personal support and compassionate care!
